GLADSTONE IS ILL.

The Old Campaigner is Still Confined to His Bed---Nothing Serious.

The Sultan Must Accept the Terms of the Powers or Lose Armenia.

Crisis in Asia Minor--Europeans Fleeing--An Outbreak Inevitable.

London, June 5.—The Daily News this morning in a leading article headed "Why cannot the president of a republic go abroad," discusses the desirability of the presidents of France and the United States visiting England as a means of increasing the friendly relations between these countries. Continuing the Daily News says: "We should be delighted to receive a visit from the president of the United States. There's surely no reason why the pleasure of travel and the delight, and even the possible duty of visiting foreign capitals, should be left to the monarchs alone."

Nasrulla Khan, son of the ameer of Afghanistan, and his suite, attended religious services in the Mohammedan Mosque at Working yesterday in honor of the Moslem Feast of Bairam.

The correspondent of the Standard at Constantinople telegraphs as follows: "I learn from a trustworthy source that the reply of the porte to the British, French and Russian notes in reference to reforms in Armenia, rejects the proposal to appoint a high commissioner in Armenia and a mixed commission and proposed merely to apply the reforms provided for in the old Aristarchi code, which has been nominally in force for the last half century. The reply also grants amnesty to all Armenians who have been implicated in the recent riots in Armenia. It is believed the powers will fix a date for the simple acceptance of their scheme, failing which they will proceed to enforce it." In an editorial commenting upon the foregoing dispatch from Constantinople the Standard suggests that the rejection of the scheme proposed by the powers is a device for the purpose of gaining time. The Sultan, it says, must make his choice. He must accept the reforms proposed or see Armenia severed from his empire.

Mrs. Grimwood, the heroine of the siege of Manipur in 1891, during which her husband lost his life, was married at Carshalton to Mr. Miller, a paper manufacturer.

The Times this morning announces the death in Paris on Monday last of the Right Hon. Sir Charles Augustus Murray, K.C.B.P.C. His first wife was an American, Miss Elizabeth Wadsworth, daughter of the late James Wadsworth.

This morning's Daily Graphic prints an appeal from the Christians of Beyrout to Europe against Turkish oppression, massacre, robbery and violation in that section of their part of the dominion. The appeal asserts that even Christian bishops are bribed by the porte to hide the true state of affairs.

Dispatches published at Shanghai by the local press to-day and received from the Island of Formosa report great excitement at Taipen Fu. The president of the republic has escaped from his yamen and the official buildings have been burned by the rioters. Natives and Chinese soldiers are said to be looting in all directions. Rioting is also reported to have taken place at Hobe. Foreigners on the island of Formosa so far have not been molested.

Constantinople, June 5.—In a dispute to-day at Constantinople between a Turkish officer and officers of a French steamer regarding baggage, the former drew his sword and wounded one of the French officers. The Turkish official was arrested. The French embassy promptly demanded satisfaction from the Turkish government, and the latter agreed that the Turk should be tried by French law.

A dispatch from Madrid says Captain Clavijo, who shot and seriously wounded Captain-General Rivera, after the latter had refused him the hand of his daughter on Monday last, was shot at 8 o'clock this morning. The captain, who was tried by court martial and sentenced to death yesterday, displayed marvellous fortitude and composure until the last.

A Hong Kong dispatch says the republic of Formosa has collapsed, its president Tang has escaped from the island and the foreigners resident there are in safety. The Chinese forces in the northern part of the Island became disorganized at the approach of the Japanese troops and the soldiers of the president of the republic joined in rioting and looting and in burning the government buildings at Taipen Fu and Hobe.

Advices received at Constantinople from Djeddah, the Arabian seaport town of Mecca, where the consular officers of Great Britain, Russia and France were recently murderously assaulted, announce that a panic prevails there, and it is feared the Bedouins will attack the town. The latter are held responsible for the attack upon the consuls which resulted in the death of the British vice-consul, and a number of them were arrested in consequence. This has caused an angry feeling among the Bedouins, who demand their release and also threaten to use force if the demands are not complied with. The situation is so serious that the Europeans of Djeddah are hastily seeking a refuge on board the merchant vessels in the harbor, taking with them all they possibly can of their belongings. The arrival at Djeddah of the British Mediterranean squadron, numbering 17 warships of various classes, is anxiously expected even by the Turkish authorities, as the garrison is very weak. In addition to the excitement caused among the Bedouins by the arrest of those supposed to have been connected with the assault upon the foreign consuls, they are dissatisfied with the quarantine measures which the Turkish government have been compelled to take at Mecca, at the instance of the powers, in order to prevent the introduction of cholera into the northern ports by the return of infected pilgrims.

A special dispatch from Madrid says the soldiers who executed Captain Clavijo had to fire three times. Clavijo first fell with three bullets in his head and still moved after the soldiers had fired another shot into his head from under the chin. Even then the captain moved and did not die until a soldier fired a bullet through his heart.

The envoys of Great Britain, Russia and France in Constantinople are waiting instructions from their governments in regard to the situation of affairs at Djeddah, as well as regarding the refusal of the Turkish government to agree to the reforms in Armenia which have been proposed by the powers. In this connection the situation of affairs is unchanged. The Porte's reply is, however, regarded as a momentary success for the military party. On the other hand the policy of Turkey in this matter is criticised by Ottoman statesmen, who regard the Porte's action as disastrous to Turkey.

Savings Bank Deposits Decreasing---Boodle for Connor---Curious Items.

What it Cost to Keep Foster's Seat --A Kick From the Auditor-General.

Ottawa, June 5.—H. A. Ward, ex-M. P. for East Durham, is in the city today with a score of representatives from his district forcing his claims upon the government for an appointment to one of the vacancies in the senate.

At a meeting of the railway committee to-day the time for building the Great Northwestern Central railway was extended for seven years, but a proviso was inserted compelling the company to build 50 miles by the first of January, 1897, and 50 miles every subsequent year.

F. J. Wynyard, alias Smith, the post-office money order forger, pleaded guilty on two counts charged by the department here, and Police Magistrate O'Gara sent him to Kingston penitentiary for five years.

The official opening of the "Soo" canal has been abandoned, members of parliament on both sides declining to take part in it at present owing to parliament sitting. The canal will be opened next week for traffic without any formality.

A return recently laid on the table of the house included a copy of an agreement between John Connor, of St. John, N. B., and the warden of the Kingston penitentiary, regarding the binder twine mill now operated at the Kingston penitentiary. For establishing the binder twine works and for furnishing an instructor for twenty days, Connors was to be paid $40,000, the government to pay duty on all the machinery connected therewith when imported into Canada.

Some of the accounts which pass under the notice of the auditor-general at Ottawa are very funny. Here is one sent in on account of a public employee: "One pair of boots, $7.50; 1 pair of trousers, $3.20; 1 pair of trousers, $4; 1 portmanteau, $24." The auditor-general not unreasonably remarks that these charges appear to be of a personal nature, and should not be allowed as a charge against public moneys. Please explain." The explanation is not published.

The deposits both in the Dominion government and postoffice savings banks declined during the month of April, the former to the amount of $42,711 and the latter by $146,345, or $189,056 altogether.

In the senate on Monday night Senator Miller (Conservative, Nova Scotia), attacked the government for not filling the ten vacancies now in the senate. Sir Mackenzie Bowell promised to see that the appointments were made.

The census of the population in the Northwest Territories taken by the Mounted Police was received at the department of the interior. The following is the population of whites and half-breeds in the Territories compared with the census of 1891: Alberta, 1891, 18,322; 1894, 28,783. East Assiniboia, 1891, 17,511; 1894, 23,696. West Assiniboia, 1891, 8837; 1894, 11,060. Saskatchewan, 1891, 7469; 1894, 9931. Totals, 1891, 52,730; 1894, 73,506. Indian population, 1891, 14,567; 1894, 13,345. Total population of whites, half-breeds and Indians for the Territories in 1891, 66,700; total, 1894, 86,851; increase, 20,052, or 30 per cent.

The public accounts committee yesterday made inquiry into several departmental arrearages. It appears the friends of Foster are indebted to the inland revenue department $100,000; to department of railways and canals, $268,000; public works department, $73,000. The "Soo" canal construction will be entered into at next meeting.

In the house a petition was presented from the auditor-general complaining against the government for interference in his free exercise of his duty in the interests of the people of the country.

Dickie stated in the house that General Herbert would not resume his duties commanding the militia. The government does not intend making any change in the law so as to appoint a Canadian to the position.

A Calais dispatch says Madame Lambert, the sister of the premier, M. Ribot, was accidentally killed there to-day. She was standing at a railway crossing just as the train was approaching. She became frightened, fell upon the track, and before any assistance could be rendered the train rushed by and severed both legs from her body. The unfortunate lady died instantly.

A Tangier dispatch says four carloads of salted heads of the rebel Raisa tribesmen have arrived at Rabat on their way to Fez. But on their arrival at Rabat the heads were found to be in such a bad condition that the government officials compelled a number of Jews to resalt them.

Advices from Colon announce a new uprising against the government of Colombia has been discovered at Barranquilla, in the department of Bolivara, the capital of the province of its own name. Martial law has been declared in the department of Bolivara.

Dispatches received at Madrid from Havana say Major Arminan in pursuing the insurgents encountered a band of the latter at Enteral, Porto Principe, and opened fire upon them. The enemy retreated and left 15 saddle horses in the hands of the troops. Major Terreir, while on his way to Purto Principe at the head of the detachment of troops, encountered a band of insurgents proceeding in the same direction. A skirmish followed and the insurgents ran away, leaving their dead, a quantity of arms and five horses. The insurgent band commanded by Maceo has burned the village of Seville, near the mines of Jaragua, Santiago de Cuba.

Madrid, June 5.—General Prima de Rivera, captain-general of Madrid, who was shot yesterday by Captain Clavijo, is better. He has been spitting blood since he received his wound, but this is decreasing and he sleeps at intervals. The trial of Clavijo by court martial began to-day. In his defense Clavijo stated that he was driven to commit the deed by the persecution to which he had been subjected by General Prima de Rivera. He declared that the general acted under the influence of a demimonde who had a grudge against him. The general, he further asserted, had caused his pay to be witheld, with the result that he became so distressed financially that he was obliged repeatedly to appeal to the generosity of his friends. Upon the conclusion of Clavijo's statement, the judge advocate addressed the court, demanding that the sentence of death be imposed upon the captain. Clavijo's counsel then, on the ground that the captain was not on military duty when he attacked the captain-general, and also that he had been twice submitted to medical supervision on the suspicion that his mind was deranged, eloquently appealed for mercy for the prisoner. He reminded the court of his military career, during which he gained promotion on the field of battle, and in conclusion said that the imposition of a death sentence would be a severe blow to the aged father and mother of Clavijo. Notwithstanding the appeal of counsel, the court, after deliberating, pronounced the prisoner guilty and sentenced him to death. He will be shot at 5 o'clock to-morrow morning.

None But Ayer's at the World's Fair.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla enjoys the extraordinary distinction of having been the only blood purifier allowed an exhibit at the World's fair, Chicago. Manufacturers of other sarsaparillas sought by every means to obtain a showing of their goods, but they were all turned away under the application of the rule forbidding the entry of patent medicines and nostrums. The decision of the World's fair authorities in favor of Ayer's Sarsaparilla was in effect as follows: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla is not a patent medicine. It does not belong to the list of nostrums. It is here on its merits."

NEWFOUNDLAND.

So Far the Fisheries Have Been About the Average.

St. John, Nfld., June 4.—An adjournment of the legislature occasions uneasiness, especially as the newspapers publish press clippings tending to show that certain legal points require to be proven before the loan negotiations can be concluded. The legislature may not proceed to business until after Colonial Secretary Bond's return from England, if he can get back before the end of June. If not the retrenchment proposals will be introduced, as it is essential that all changes of salaries and reductions of grants begin before the next quarter. The fishery reports show an average catch so far this year. Sir Herbert Murray, British commissioner, who was sent here by the Imperial government to aid in the relief of the poor, is arranging to conclude his work by June 15.

—Most coughs may be cured in a few hours or at any rate in a few days, by use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. With such a prompt and sure remedy as this at hand, there is no need of prolonging the agony for weeks and months. Keep this remedy in your house.

QUEER GOVERNMENT WORK.

Disobeying an Order of the House to Produce Papers.

Ottawa, May 31.—In the house to-day Tupper moved a resolution providing that the salaries of the two circuit judges of Montreal shall be $3000 per annum; five county court judges in Manitoba, $2000 per annum, and $2400 after the first three years. He stated that it was not the intention to increase the salaries of the Ontario judges. The motion carried.

On motion to go into supply, Brodeur renewed his demand of last session for the production of the report of the post-office inspector in the charge against B. Loiselle, a dismissed postmaster, ordered by the house three years ago.

Caron excused himself by saying that the papers had been sent to the secretary of state's office and lost there.

Laurier pointed out that the papers sent to the secretary of state would be copied and the originals would still be in the department.

Haggart, who was postmaster-general at the time, said he sent the original documents to Chapleau, then secretary of state, who asked for them and afterwards Chapleau stated the papers were lost.

Brodeur said he had himself seen the inspector's report in the court at Montreal, where the innocence of Loiselle was clearly established.

Caron admitted that the original inspector's report upon which Loiselle was dismissed was still in the department, but he refused to produce it because it was confidential.

Mills characterized the refusal as an outrage on the rights of parliament, because the order of the house passed in 1892 expressly named the report of the inspector, and added: "All other papers whatever." The house was superior to the government, who had no right to disobey an order of the house. The inspector was charged with engaging in a conspiracy to wrong this postmaster by making a false report and parliament had a right to decide as it did to obtain this report and right the wrong and order dismissal of the officer if he deserved it.

Mr. Haggart stated that whether the house ordered it or not the government would not bring down confidential documents. The opposition took issue with the minister.

Lister denounced the idea as opposed to the first principle of British justice that a public official should be stigmatized as corrupt and ruined on the strength of a false and secret report. Such conduct on the part of ministers of the crown was disgraceful and contemptible. Mr. B. Loisette, who was postmaster of St. Angele de Moinnoir, was charged with detaining a registered letter and with forgery in altering the date of a stamp of receipt on the letter.

Finally, after a heated discussion, and repeated refusals by the postmaster-general to bring down the document, Foster got up and said that the order of the house called for the production of this document and it would therefore be produced.

This capitulation after a strenuous resistance was most humiliating to the government, which showed a divided counsel. The matter was discussed in council this afternoon and it was decided to resist the demand of Brodeur.

Before the debate ended Mr. Mulock commented on Tupper's long argument against bringing down the report and charged that the conduct of the minister of justice was calculated to defeat the ends of justice.

Mr. Daly said that up to to-day the government was not aware of the existence of the order of the house calling for the inspector's report.

Mills pointed out that the original order of 1892 called specifically for that report and another order of last year also called for it.

The motion to go into supply was then carried, while the opposition laughed at the government.

Your Wife Gets Mad

When you stay out too late, when you make the usual pretence of business when she knows it is something else, when you approach her beautiful angel cake with a sigh of despair; but when you bring home in the spring a Rigby Porous Waterproof coat she will promptly vote you a sensible fellow, for is she not wearing, with utmost satisfaction, a Rigby waterproof herself? She bought the Rigby cloth and had it made to order. Rigby is unique. While others have experimented and failed, Rigby has achieved a signal triumph. It's Rigby that's asked for in the dry goods stores. It's Rigby that men and women talk about when rain comes on. "Caught in a storm, and I forgot my Rigby," says the lady in distress. People say—the bank of Montreal for solidity; Canadian girls for beauty; Chicago for large feet; and—Rigby for comfort and a perfect protector against the watery elements.

FOR A TAX ON NOBLEMEN.

Ingenious Idea Whereby France Hopes To Pay Her National Debt.

French marquises, counts and barons are growing as common as asparagus in the month of May. Every well-dressed man in Paris thinks himself dishonored if his buttonhole is not ornamented with a decoration of some kind, or if on his visiting card a coronet is not engraved. Never have there been more aristocrats in France than under the third republic.

One of the remarkable things about this is that the great majority have no right to prefix a title to their names, but as the offence is a harmless one no serious objections have been raised so far by the authorities. On the contrary, it seems as if the government were rather inclined to countenance titles. Such is the opinion of a learned deputy, M. Girault, who, when parliament reassembles, intends to introduce a bill by which all noblemen shall be taxed.

The tariff will be levied according to the rank of nobility selected by a party in quest of aristocratic glory. A prince will be compelled to pay the maximum tariff, a duke will come next on the schedule, and all the titles will be submitted to an inflexible law, which M. Girault has carefully prepared, and which is destined to ameliorate the financial condition of the nation and facilitate in years to come the equilibrium of the budget.

However revolutionary M. Girault's plan may appear, no one will deny that it is a most democratic revolution, for a noble title being anything but an article of absolute necessity, only those with money to spare will have anything to pay. It is an original method of making the rich bear a larger share of the burdens of taxation. Without doing this by taxing their incomes direct, it taxes their titles as an article of luxury and as something which gives the possessors a certain homage in the eyes of the people, for which they ought to be willing to make compensation.

"M. Girault's law, notwithstanding its originality," says a French writer, "has been turned to ridicule in France before it has been read for the first time in the chamber of deputies. There are some who ask if it would not be better to organize an immense lottery, the grand prize of which would be a title of prince and the lesser ones titles of lower order. The journey to Rome would be avoided, and all titles possessed by Frenchmen would be strictly national."

MUNICIPAL.

$10 REWARD.

The above mentioned reward is hereby offered for such information as will lead to the conviction of any person or persons breaking the glass of the window of any unoccupied house or other, in the City of Victoria, or damaging in any way any portion thereof, or of the premises appertaining thereto, or removing therefrom any article belonging to the said premises, or defacing injuring or destroying any street sign or other property belonging to the Corporation of the City of Victoria.

By order,
WELLINGTON J. DOWLER,
C.M.C.
Victoria, B.C., March 20th, 1895.

Notice to Water Consumers.

The attention of consumers of water supplied from the City Water Works is hereby drawn to Sections 12, 20, and 23 of The Water Works Regulation By-Law, 1894, which provides that from the 15th day of April to the 15th day of September, both inclusive, in each year, no consumer of water of the said water works shall use such water for irrigating except on the respective days hereinafter mentioned, namely:

In the North Ward on Mondays and Thursdays.
In the Central Ward on Tuesdays and Fridays.
In the South Ward on Wednesdays and Saturdays.

If water is used for watering lawns or gardens at other than the time hereinbefore mentioned the water will be turned off, and there shall be charged in addition to ordinary rates the sum of fifty cents for each infraction.

The above penalties will be strictly enforced.

More Settlers for Bella Coola—Trawling for Seals—Fire at Woodstock.

Halifax, N. S., June 4.—Word has been received here to the effect that sealers have been spreading trawls near Sable Island, not far from the northeast bar, which is a rendezvous for seals while yet young, and which is, in fact, the only available place for the animals in this part of the Atlantic. Complaint is also made that the foxes which were placed on the island some three years ago for the extermination of pestiferous cats, have failed in this object, and have made serious ravages upon the black and shell ducks, of which the island is a favorite resort. These matters will be brought to the attention of the government.

Montreal, June 4.—While laborers were excavating the site of the new Dalhousie Square station of the C. P. R. this afternoon a landslide occurred, killing one man and injuring several others.

The grand jury has returned a true bill against two Grand Trunk conductors, William Lewis and Frederick Pemville, for conspiring to defraud.

Woodstock, June 4.—A two-story frame house on Dundas street, owned by J. and T. Grant, and occupied by Thomas Cole, where he carried a $15,000 stock of dry goods, was destroyed by fire this evening. The stock is a total loss. It was insured for $4000 in the Commercial Union and London and Lancashire companies. The building was insured for $1000 in the Waterloo Mutual.

Toronto, June 4.—It is stated here that the crown has secured evidence in the Otonabe tragedy to prove that the head of David Scoollie was sawn from the body with a buck saw and that the operator was a woman.

The remains of Willie Wells, with whose murder the Hyamses are charged, are still at the undertaker's here, and are not likely to be buried until after the next trial.

The name of ex-Ald. Hall, of this city, who was mixed up in the recent boodling investigation, has been removed from the roll of barristers for Ontario.

Mary Atkinson, aged seventy-six, died in the country jail yesterday from the effects of a criminal assault committed on her on Wednesday night by William Broom and Frank Smith. Broom and Smith, who have each served terms in the penitentiary, are under arrest.

Winnipeg, June 4.—The Archbishop of Athabaska writes in the city press calling attention to the rapid devastation of the northern forests by fires. He says many parts of his diocese formerly thick with timber are now but blackened wastes.

All the members of the Winnipeg city police force have been appointed provincial constables by the local government, so as to provide better police protection in the surburbs of the city.

A big beaver dam has been discovered on the line of the projected Hudson's Bay road, north of Gladstone.

John Goldstaub, merchant, of Plum Coulee, has been sentenced to three months imprisonment for concealing goods with intent to defraud the insurance companies.

Winnipeg capitalists are reported to have discovered a good bed of coal at Buffalo point, adjacent to the Lake of the Woods, and near the United States boundary. It is now being surveyed.

Several Hungarians from North Dakota arrived here to-day en route to the Bella Coola, B.C., district, where they [illegible] P.R. Passenger Agent Farrel.

Toronto, June 4.—There was a very fashionable marriage this evening at 8 o'clock in the Church of the Redeemer, when Albert Johnson, of New York, was wedded to Louise Victoria MacFarlane, daughter of J. F. M. MacFarlane, of this city. There were three hundred and fifty guests, many of whom were from New York, Cleveland, Boston and other American cities.

Serious Conflict Between Miners—Fair Rosamund in Original Costumes.

A Deluge of Rain Extinguishes the Flames in the Oil Districts.

Russel City, Pa., June 5.—Rain came down in torrents last evening. The fires in the woods are out and no further danger in this vicinity is anticipated. The damage to lumber and oil properties is enormous. Over 3,000 acres of valuable timber and $100,000 worth of oil property were destroyed. The principal losers are the Northern Oil Co., South Pennsylvania Oil Co., Elk Oil Co., and Fitzgerald Bros. The Griffith estate lost a number of rigs. It is impossible to give anything like an estimate at this hour. No lives were lost at Coon Run and the people will return to their homes this morning, that is, those who have homes left.

Jackson, Mich., June 5.—A fire totally destroyed Collins' cart works here. The company employed 300 men. The fire spread to the Fuller Buggy works, which were damaged. Collins' loss is about $50,000, covered by insurance. Total loss reaches $75,000.

Wheeling, W. Va., June 5.—Shortly after the 35 miners who returned to works at L. Gaylord coal works above Martins Ferry, Ohio, last Monday, had gone in the bank yesterday, two hundred Huns, Slavs and Poles from Dillonville, Laurelton and other mining towns on the Wheeling and Lake Erie appeared, having gathered previously, and marched across the country headed by a brass band. One gang went into the mine and beat those at work, driving them out, while about 130 men formed a gauntlet above the entrances as the fleeing miners ran out and struck them with clubs and crowbars and then threw the workmen over the bank. Half of them were injured, nine seriously. Three are still missing. Seven of the assailants were captured by deputy sheriffs and are now in jail at Bridgeport. Others walked home, while about 100 captured the C. & P. freight train and made the crew carry them to Portland.

Albany, June 4.—The pastoral play of Fair Rosamund was given for the first time in this country to-day at the farm of the Hon. Erastus Cowan by society people of this city. The production was in the original costumes used by Lady Colin Campbell in England.

New York, June 4.—One of the happiest men in this city to-day was "Dan" Stewart, the representative of the Dallas, Texas, syndicate. Last night he was elected president and treasurer of the Florida athletic club, which owns, according to the agreement signed by Fitzsimmons and Corbett last year, the right to bring off a pugilistic exhibition in which these two men will be the principals.

The Evening Post's special financial cablegram from London to-day is as follows: The stock market was quiet but firm to-day. Consols made a record price of 106⅝. It is common talk that they will go to 110. American gold bonds were largely bought, but shares were bullish on New York prices.

There was a slight increase in the volume of business on the Wall street stock exchange to-day. The following were the closing prices for the day: American cotton oil, 28; American sugar, 118¼; do. preferred, 100¼; American tobacco, 114; lead, 30; Northern Pacific, 5½; do. preferred, 19½. Sterling exchange sixty days, $4.88½; do. demand, $4.89½; money, 1; C.P.R. in London, 54¼.

THE EDITOR'S WIFE

A SUFFERER FROM HEADACHES AND DYSPEPSIA FOR YEARS.

The editor of Le Spectateur has often been asked whether he thought entire reliance can be placed in the statements appearing each week in the newspapers with reference to cures brought about by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and can unhesitatingly say that he believes the half has not been told, and that for each cure that has been made public through the press there are scores of others, no doubt quite as remarkable, of which the general public never hear. Many people shrink from permitting the publication of a statement of their cure and for this reason it is never heard of outside the circle of their acquaintances. We believe this to be all wrong, and think it is a duty those who have recovered health and strength owe to others less fortunate, to make the means of their restoration public. This at all events is the spirit that animates the editor of Le Spectateur in making known, for the good it may do others, the fact that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have, in his own household, proven worthy of the high praises accorded them elsewhere. Mme. Page was for upwards of seven years an almost constant sufferer from severe headaches, pain in the back and dyspepsia. As a result her appetite was fickle, and she was reduced to a state of great weakness. It was in 1887 that she first began to be troubled, and this condition of affairs continued until 1893. At that time, as a result of having read of much of the cures wrought by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, a [illegible] observed that she was regaining her old-time health. The continued use of the pills for a time had the most beneficial effect. The headaches left, so did the pains in the back, and the stomach was restored to its normal condition, and when she discontinued the Pink Pills it was with a feeling that her health was entirely restored. During the past winter Mme. Page had another somewhat similar attack, but, resorting again to Pink Pills, she was soon on the road to recovery, and we have no hesitation in recommending them as an unequalled blood builder and nerve restorer, having seen their good effects in other cases than the one above noted."

NEW LINE TO THE ORIENT

Sutherland Trying to Enlist Hill in the Hudson Bay Railway Scheme.

Portland, June 4.—The impression prevails in railroad circles that James J Hill, president of the Great Northern railroad, who is now in this city, intends to establish a line of steamers to the Orient at no distant date, and that his present western trip is to look into the feasibility of the undertaking and determine the point at which to put on the line. Mr. Hill was in consultation today with several prominent business men and financiers of this city. Several Chinese merchants were among the number. Judge O. N. Denny, ex-American consul to Shanghai, was one of Mr. Hill's visitors. After leaving Mr. Hill Judge Denny said that the subject of their conversation had been Chinese trade. He declined to say anything further.

Mr. Hill would say nothing definite regarding the steamship line, simply stating that the matter would be made public at the proper time. When asked regarding the earning capacity of the Great Northern west of Montana, and the rumors that the western end was eating up the profits of the eastern end, Mr. Hill said:

"I am very well satisfied with the business of the western line. Our earnings are not as great as we would like, but the road is managed economically and is doing pretty well. It is not losing money. There is one division in the western lines that makes as much in clear profits as any other division in the entire system, with one single exception. The Great Northern has never been in such good condition financially as now."

"Do you think the general business condition of the country is improving?"

"Yes; I know it is. There is a most perceptible change for the better."

"Has the free coinage of silver agitation hurt the country?"

"Decidedly. It has impaired credit. Our credits are not very good now, and if there is ever danger of a free coinage bill being passed by congress there will be a financial panic."

Mr. Hill will leave to-morrow for Seattle.

New York, June 4.—Chairman Edward D. Adams, of the Northern Pacific reorganization committee, who returned from Europe Saturday, said to-day to an Associated Press reporter: "I was called abroad unexpectedly by cable and had a conference in London with J. Pierpont Morgan, representative of the Deutsche bank and the Great Northern railroad interest. After that I went to Berlin and conferred with four separate Nothern Pacific committees. All I care to say now is that I have returned with full authority to continue my work in preparation of the plan for the reorganization of the Northern Pacific."

St. Paul, June 4.—President Hugh Sutherland, of the Hudson Bay road, is in the city conferring with the Foley Bros., the contractors associated with Donald Grant in the construction, which is to begin immediately. Surveying is completed, he said, and the grading will begin to-day at a point near Gladstone, on the Manitoba & Northwestern line, about fifty miles northwest of Winnipeg. One hundred and twenty-five miles will be completed this season.

The route is from Winnipeg 650 miles to Hudson Bay, running in a northwesterly direction to the mouth of the Saskatchewan, and from there direct to Fort Nelson. The water route is from Fort Nelson to Liverpool across the straits and along the same ocean line as the Dominion steamers. The railroad is 1,000 miles shorter than that of the Canadian Pacific or any other transcontinental route, and the sea voyage will be 300 miles shorter than via New York. St. Paul will be nearer Liverpool by 500 miles than via New York, as the rail distance to New York from here is 1,300 miles, while to Fort Nelson it will be but 1,100 miles. A fleet will be put on as soon as the rail line is completed. The main line will be completed in two years and it will be operated in three years.

Ottawa, Ont., June 4.—Private advices from Winnipeg say that Promoter Sutherland, of the Hudson Bay railway, is negotiating with James J. Hill, the Great Northern magnate, to conduct the Hudson Bay road as a formidable [illegible] to the Canadian Pacific.

THE INTERRUPTED WEDDING.

To the Editor:—I have read an extract in the Times from London Truth entitled "An Interrupted Wedding, Cupid squeezed till he squealed by a thrifty Scot." The item is catchy and spicy, but so far as the "thrifty Scot" is concerned he cuts no figure, since in a subsequent issue of Truth an ample apology is made to the proud son of the north and the explanation offered that the intended bridegroom was an English Church clergyman—a base Southerner in fact. The shrewd business instinct of the Scot has been the butt of many a joke, but it is a mistake to represent him as indifferent to the fair sex, for he is a romantic character as well as practical and "dearly loves the lassies oh."

CENSUS FALSIFICATIONS.

The census enumerators in 1891 made out that there were 804 manufacturing establishments to be found in London, but it appears that out of these 350 are establishments in which nobody works except the proprietors. There may be something to admire in the ingenuity which transforms a needlewoman into a "manufacturing establishment," but the result is calculated to cast serious doubt on the accuracy of the census. And the London example is only one out of many. Dalton McCarthy in one of his speeches in the house showed that there had been a ridiculous exaggeration of the industrial establishments and the employees to be found therein by the enumerators. There can be no censure too severe for the crime of falsifying the census in this way for the purpose of bolstering up the government and the precious N. P.; it is practically on a par with forgery and the "raising" of bank notes. The population was also falsely enumerated, perhaps in equal degree. On this point the Halifax Chronicle recently said: "Dr. Borden, M.P. for Kings county, demonstrated in parliament, by irrefragable evidence, that in a few districts of his county the exaggeration of population mounted up into the hundreds. In an interview published about two years ago Senator Snowball, of Chatham, N.B., declared that scores of people in some districts in Northumberland county, who had been in the States for years, were included in the enumeration as citizens of Canada. And while the census was being taken enumerators frankly stated in answer to enquiries that they were instructed to include in their returns people who had been only one or two years in the States and had not become American citizens." Even as it stands the census of 1891 constitutes a severe arraignment of the N. P., but when due allowance is made for the gross falsifications the case for the Conservative policy becomes very much worse.

GOOD AUTHORITY.

When Sir John Macdonald, as leader of the opposition, introduced his national policy resolution he was requested to explain his scheme. His reply was as follows: "It is not forced upon the opposition to find a new policy with regard to matters of revenue and tariff and expenditure; they could not, of course, because they have not the power to do so. As far as matters of tariff are concerned, it is impossible for the opposition to enter into details, or explain before the House or the country their policy. They have not the material; the government alone have the opportunity, and the only opportunity, of collecting the facts upon which a tariff can be formed. The minister of finance has already informed you that even with all the materials that he has at hand it is not an easy matter to form a tariff; and it would be presumption in the opposition to attempt to do so. I shall therefore confine myself to general principles." The Liberal platform is lucidity itself compared with the indefinite character of the national policy resolution moved by Sir John when in opposition.

Sir Richard Cartwright's amendment to the budget motion was rejected in the commons by a majority of 46. Last session a similar amendment was defeated by 56, so the government's majority this year had decreased by 10. A noteworthy incident connected with the vote this year was the vigorous applause with which the ministerialists received Thomas McGreevy when he stood up to vote for the government. Perhaps they were only marking their joy at his recovery from his illness, although another incident was the vote cast by Mr. Calvin, Conservative M. P. for Frontenac. Of him an Ottawa correspondent says:

"The defection of Mr. Calvin, Conservative member for Frontenac, is much more talked of to-day. He is a comparatively young man, whose father did a large business and who is himself engaged in an extensive trade. Very likely he had not given very much attention to the tariff question, but he was one of the members who came to Ottawa pledged to support the government's policy. He was one of the members became a Conservative because his father was a supporter of Sir John Macdonald. When he came to Ottawa in 1891 for his first session he saw disclosed the frightful corruption on the part of the Conservatives, which was exposed during that session. He had to listen to the speeches of the Liberal leaders on the trade question and heard the best defence the government could make. His eyes were opened and Mr. Calvin votes against the protective tariff and in favor of a tariff for revenue only. So impossible is it for him to continue to support a protective government that he declines to run again for Frontenac and retires into private life for the present."

When election time comes there will be a great many voters showing a change of opinion similar to that of Mr. Calvin.

The Colonist has made the remarkable discovery that "both Victoria and New South Wales have re-established themselves on a sound footing, without any change in their fiscal systems." It is singular that both colonies should at the present time be engaged in making changes in their fiscal systems—a very radical change in the case of New South Wales. Evidently the people of the two colonies know a good deal less about their own condition than our wonderfully clever neighbor.

EMPLOYING CHINAMEN.

To the Editor:—Having been assisting to swell the ranks of the unemployed for the last two years, and being a native-born Victorian and always hopeful of my native place giving me support as a house painter and decorator, my heart almost failed to perform its functions to-day while I was passing Senator Macdonald's residence, James Bay.

There, in the full effulgence of the midday sun, a Chinaman was engaged painting the exterior wood work of the above residence. Comment would be superfluous. No wonder that working people are driven to desperation to obtain the necessaries of life and look for relief from the present unjust selfishness which is such a dominant feature of some Conservative constitutions either in Single Tax or any other God-given remedy. FAIR PLAY.

MUSIC AT THE PARK.

To the Editor:—I have read a letter of the 4th in your valuable paper from S. D. Schultz in regard to band concerts on Saturday afternoon, of its being a detriment to all athletic sports. Does Mr. Schultz remember four or five years ago the band used to play at Beacon Hill on Saturday afternoons when sports and games were more numerous than now? If people are so fond of baseball and lacrosse they will go and see it in spite of the music. Mr. Schultz does not think of the many ladies and children who delight in hearing the band but could not afford to pay to see the games. Mr. Schultz also speaks of the band concerts in the East. I well remember when I was living in Toronto the band used to play in the park every Saturday afternoon at the expense of the city. Mr. Schultz need not be afraid of not getting well patronized at their baseball games. If people are in love with that kind of sport nothing will keep them away. FAIR PLAY.

CANADIAN DISPATCHES.

A Severe Storm Passes Over Belleville, Ontario.

Winnipeg, June 5.—The Lake of the Woods Milling Co. have decided to increase their elevator capacity in this province by 750,000 bushels.

Belleville, June 5.—A big storm is passing over here. Pieces of ice a half inch thick by two inches square fell, breaking the windows in many places. Barns were blown down and four cottages on Big Island were also demolished.

Napanee, Ont., June 5.—Fred Neilson, aged 15, attending the collegiate institute here, while swimming in the Napanee river yesterday was seized with a cramp and was drowned.

Smith's Falls, June 5.—At yesterday's session of the Montreal Methodist conference there was a spirited discussion on the Manitoba school question. Dr. Shaw endeavored by various means to shelve the subject, but the conference was almost unanimous in declaring against federal interference.

Kingston, June 5.—The negotiations which have been for some time going on between the Kingston city council and certain parties in the United States with a view to the establishment of a blast furnace here have collapsed.

Toronto, Ont., June 5.—R. K. Oliver, barrister, of this city, died at Rochester yesterday.

SHROUDED IN MYSTERY.

The Nellie Harrington Murder Baffles the Police.

San Francisco, June 5.—After seventy-two hours of work on the murder of Nellie Harrington, the detectives admit that they are completely baffled as to the motive for the deed or the identity of the murderers. The detectives are positive on one point only, that the person with whom Miss Harrington had an engagement between 12 and 1 o'clock last Saturday committed the murder, and the brutal character of the blows inflicted lead to the belief that the murderer is a man. The police have in possession of 150 private letters, the contents of which are said to be sensational. Ex-Senator Buck, the murdered woman's most intimate friend, died this morning from injuries received in falling from the cart in which he was being driven by the policeman to the office of the chief of police for consultation. He was relied upon to throw some light upon the tragedy. With his death the detectives are at a loss to secure a clue or suggest a motive for the murder.

THE CARNIVAL AT OTTAWA.

1893 was a perfect carnival year for the government at Ottawa and a low Jericho. There was that perfect panorama at Paris, the gorgeousness of which cost the Canadian taxpayers $50,000 or more, and in which the Frenchmen got a great idea of the magnificence of our Canadian institutions. There were more than a dozen "hitched-on" to this Behring sea business, which proved such a perfect abortion. While it was going on Minister Bowell was on a trip in a palace steamer to the golden land of Australia; another was doing the West Indies in Oriental magnificence; the heads and deputies of departments passed each other on the ocean at many a trip of the finest greyhounds of the steamship lines; and—to make it brief—it seemed as if the whole gang were having a royal holiday.

Some of the bills were paid last year—others only appear in the public accounts now.

Among the M.P.'s—the independent Tory M.P.'s—who "got a job" during this gay summer, was Mr. G. R. R. Cockburn. He was sent as Canadian commissioner to the Chicago World's Fair, and for the brief time he was there the expenses show $4,425, among which were items totalling $957.08, for which there were no vouchers, but which it was certified were wholly for the service of the commissioner in connection with the pavilion during the Columbian exposition. He had vouchers for hotel bills amounting to $3,320.78. At Detroit, en route, his bills at Hotel Cadillac for 1½ days amounted to $24.65; including board; 1½ days at $11, $26.50; bar, $2.25; livery, $3.00; cab, $2.70; cleaning shoes, 20c.

At Chicago he was at the Virginia hotel. His board averaged from $16 to $20 per day. Here is a sample week:

Oct. 21—To board from 10-14 to 10-21, 7 days, at $16		$112 00
	To wines and liquors	5 80

NANAIMO NEWS.

The Foresters Will Visit Victoria—Liberal Meeting.

Nanaimo, June 5.—A meeting of the Liberal party of this city will be held on Friday night to determine the course to be pursued in behalf of the candidature of Mr. R. Smith.

J. Isaacs was brought before the magistrate yesterday and was given two hours in which to leave the city. Isaacs was glad to get off so light and lost no time in carrying out the order.

The Foresters of this city are making extensive preparations for a large contingent to take part in the annual demonstration to be held at Victoria on the 15th instant.

M. Fitzpatrick has agreed to act as referee in the walking match on Saturday between A. Hancock, the English champion, and V. H. Sutton, the champion of the United States.

There are 53 scholars writing for the High School examination. The examination is being conducted by [illegible]

CHARGE OF LIGHT BRIGADE.

Story of the "Magnificent Blunder" Retold by One Who Was Present.

Sir Beauchamp Walker, in his new book, "Days of a Soldier's Life," tells the story of the charge of the Light Brigade (at which he was present) in spirited and telling fashion. First we may give his opinion of Lord Cardigan. "He is a great swaggerer, and I cannot admire him," he says. "We have been very much amused to-day by the pranks of the 'Himilaya,'" he writes again from on board the Simla, when at last under weigh for Crimea, "which follows us in a column, but which we discovered at daybreak ahead of us, having sneaked up in the night. The signal was soon made, 'Himalaya, keep your station,' which was obeyed for a time, but about an hour ago she was discovered between our column and the end of our left. The signal was again made, 'Himalaya, keep your station astern.' We concluded that Lord Cardigan is at the bottom of this, as it looks like a piece of his silly vanity."

The immortal charge is regarded by many as the most memorable episode of this war, and Walker's account of the magnificent blunder will, of course, be looked for. "This affair had it been followed by a more prudent attempt to recover the guns taken from the Turks, would have made the 25th of October for ever famous in the history of cavalry, as an instance of what pluck can do against numbers and vantage ground, as our people actually charged uphill. Unfortunately, some little time afterwards an order was sent to Lord Lucan which led to the sad loss which we experienced, and was brought by an officer personally hostile to him, and was received without the discretion fitting in an officer of high rank. Capt. Nolan brought the order to advance rapidly and endeavor to retake guns from the Russians. Lord Lucan, instead of taking the order and exercising his own judgment as to how he carried it out, asked Capt. Nolan what he was to attack and was answered by his pointing to the Russians drawn up across the valley, with the words: 'There, my lord, is your enemy; there are the guns.' Lord Lucan immediately ordered the Light Cavalry to attack down the valley, a distance of a mile and a half, and, as it proved, into a terrain which was completely swept by the Russian artillery. As soon as we came within range, they opened on us from a line of guns formed right across the valley, from some more guns very well placed on their left, but which were partly occupied by the fire of our artillery, and on our left by a line of guns planted on the ridge of the hills near the Black river. Before they opened fire I saw these guns—or rather saw the horses—pulled out my glass, and in a moment saw what they were, and how completely they swept the whole length of our advance. I would not live over that moment for a kingdom. My only consolation was seeing two squadrons of Chasseurs d'Afrique stealing on them up the hill, and after they had pounded us for about ten minutes they did succeed in dislodging them, but they were themselves repulsed with some loss by a body of Russian infantry which was in support. I thought the fire on the 17th was pretty heavy, but it was a joke to this, which certainly for eight or ten minutes exceeded my liveliest conception. I hope I shall not soon again get such a pelting. Luckily, a great many of their shells burst too high, and though one or two of them burst within twenty yards of me, neither I nor Jemmy (his charger) were hit. By the time I got with the head of the heavy brigade to the end of the valley the light brigade, who, headed by Lord Cardigan, had charged the guns in front at full speed, were returning as best they could, from a field where they had left more than 213 of their number, and where they could do no possible good. They had ridden over the guns, sabred the gunners, and shot the horses, but were immediately attacked in front and flank, by such masses of cavalry, and received with such a fire of rifles from a fort and bushes on the right, that the only thing left was for each man to get out of the fray as best he could. Lord Lucan accordingly sounded the recall, covered their retreat with the heavy brigade, and [illegible] number of 101 men and horses, besides officers, a little in the rear of the ground from which they started.—Leeds Times.

The colonel still holds out hopes for Port Angeles and says it will yet be the metropolis of the northwest. The Great Northern railway, he says, is going to extend its line to Angeles and ferry to Victoria. But even that will not satisfy the enterprising colonel. "When we get that," he says, "we will agitate for a bridge across to Victoria, so that Victorians will be able to take a walk over at any time and spend a few hours in the largest city on the coast." According to the colonel there are still hopes for the many Victorians who hold deeds of Angeles real estate.

THE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS

Business Transacted at To-Day's Session of the Grand Lodge at Vancouver.

Change in the Law Respecting the Qualifications of Past Chancellors.

Vancouver, June 5.—The Grand Lodge, K. of P., resumed business this morning and considered reports of the committees appointed to act on the reports of the grand lodge officers. The Grand Chancellor's report recommends certain reductions in the expenses of the Grand Lodge and the appointment of representatives and alternates in case those elected are not able to attend. The report of the Supreme Representatives, C. L. Behnsen and Jas. Crossman, who attended the sessions of the Supreme Lodge at Washington, stated that the Endowment Rank is in a prosperous condition, having 29,000 members and $26,000,000 insurance, and that the British Columbia jurisdiction is the strongest in Canada. The Uniform Rank has 117 divisions and 45,000 members. The report of the committee on the state of the order in 1892 showed that there were 5,572 subordinate lodges in existence with 413,904 members, an increase of 671 lodges and 56,000 members. The Rathborne Sisters will hold a consultation with the Grand Lodge to-morrow with a view of securing co-operation of the latter in advancing the interests of the sisters throughout the province. The Grand Lodge decided not to accept as past chancellors those who put in two years and nine months as master of the exchequer, master of finance, or keeper of the records and seal, before the new law went into force.

THE SCHOOL OF ARTILLERY

Seven Lieutenants Secure First Class Grade A Certificates.

Seven lieutenants of the garrison artillery last night completed a six months' course in the artillery school under the direction of Lieut.-Col. Rawstorne, assisted by Capt. Templar and Capt. Barnes. The garrison artillery men are now entitled to first class grade A certificates. The following are the names of the lieutenants who completed the course. The percentage is also given in each subject:

KASLO AND SLOCAN RAILWAY.

Five Hundred Men at Work Clearing and Grading the Right-of-Way.

Mr. D. J. Munn, of the Kaslo & Slocan railway company, has returned from Kootenay. He says work on the road is progressing satisfactorily. There are now five hundred men at work all along the road clearing the right-of-way and grading. Another five hundred will be put to work shortly. The work of laying rails will be commenced in July and by September the iron horse will be running from Kaslo to Cody creek. Already the company have assurances of a large tonnage, the mine owners just waiting for the snow to disappear on the higher levels before they commence work.

"There is a very good feeling in the district," said Mr. Munn. "A large amount of capital is being invested with every prospect of recouping the investors. You will hear of some good finds in the vicinity of Kaslo before long, there being a number of prospectors in the town waiting to start out. But even without this there is every likelihood of prosperity. The silver ore is high grade and the owners of the mines [illegible]

WHEN WILL IT RAIN?

Show Directors Want to Know and Ask Meteorologist Baynes Reed.

Baynes Reed, the Dominion meteorologist, will be consulted on the time to hold the fall exhibition. A meeting of the association was held in the city hall last night. There were propositions to hold the show in September, while others favored October. Mr. Reed will be asked to supply data as to which will most likely be the month of smallest rainfall.

Committees were appointed on preparing prize lists: Cattle, sheep, horses and pigs, Messrs. George Deans, J. Partridge and Dr. Tolmie. Dairy produce, Messrs. G. H. Brown and F. Raitt. Miscellaneous, Messrs. Lamberton and R. T. Williams. Fine art, Messrs. C. E. Redfern and N. Shakespeare. Vegetables and field produce, Messrs. G. H. Brown, F. Raitt and D. R. Ker. Flowers, Messrs. Lamberton and Renouf. Fancy work, the Women's Council. Poultry, Messrs. Partridge and Tolmie.

R. Seabrooke and Dr. Milne were appointed a committee to make arrangements for Stanley Park for show week. Messrs. Brown, Williams and Shakespeare will look after the printing; Messrs. Falconer, Raitt, Davidge and M. Baker will attend to the racing and sporting attractions, and Messrs. Brown, Ker and Pendray will canvass the business firms of the city with a view to securing prizes for various features of the show.

SELF-SACRIFICE.

Blue. A sense, growing momentarily fainter, of being borne swiftly onward without any volition of his own, while the blue sea came dancing to meet his languidly parting eyes. A red-brown sail in the blue, and movement slower and yet slower. Then the sail hardening and coming nearer, until it suddenly resolved itself into the sharp edge of the brown marble mantlepiece.

Jocelyn Warde opened his eyes wider and sat up, intending to rise to his feet by the steading power it offered him, but abandoning his effort, with a silly smile, sat still, instead, and waited.

"No good." He shook his head with drunken gravity.

Time passed.

"* * * Can't you, won't you give it up? I used to be so proud of you, Jocelyn. I used to be so proud of myself since that night in May, when you told me of the sadness of your life, and that I could do anything for you. Now all my pride is gone. * * * Oh, my darling, when I have been counting all day upon seeing you, and then when we meet, and I look in your dear eyes and find them blurred and misty—oh, it is horrible! Won't you for my sake? I would do anything for yours."

This was part of the letter which, as the sunlight gradually faded from the blue papered room, the man had pulled from his pocket and read leisurely through. He had read it that morning on its arrival with just the same tenderness, for he had held it then, as he held it now, with an ever-pleasant sense of possession, and he had kissed it then, as he kissed it now, this hurried, nervous writing of the woman he loved. And in the meantime he had rendered himself incapable for two hours of even thinking of her.

He got on to his feet without any difficulty this time, and leaning his elbows on the mantel shelf, scrutinized his own appearance as presented by the muslin-bedecked mirror. His necktie was a bit awry; he straightened it. His hair was ruffled, but that mattered the less since Celia liked it so. Oh! it would be all right, for luckily for him she had been born without a sense of smell, which was a convenient miss as matters often now stood. He smiled as he thought of it, remembering that this detail was symbolical of the many little points Celia possessed, which circumstances had elevated into virtues since they chanced to fit to his liking.

What was the time now? Six? She was late then. It was odd that she had sent him no message, for they were to dine together at six, at a little eating place, a stone's throw from the Bloomsbury house in which he shared a couple of rooms with another man, and then to go to the pit of some theatre. It was seldom that Celia failed him. He fell to wondering if it would not be wiser for him to go out and get his own dinner, and then to come back again to see if she had arrived in the meantime, since he knew it was immaterial to her whether she had a proper meal or whether she dined off a roll as they stood in the pit entry, and he had just decided to do so when a brisk, light footfall made itself heard upon the stairs, and almost immediately a woman entered the room. She was plain and insignificant, and she carried the badge of her trade in the shape of a violin case.

"I am so sorry," she began apologetically. "I was kept. But you can't offend fresh people by getting up and going in the middle of a lesson. And it really doesn't matter so much, because we shan't be able to go to the theatre after all to-night."

"Can't? Why not?"

He had kissed her fondly before asking the question, for when analyzing himself, an occupation for the full enjoyment of which he delighted in an audience, he was wont to aver that his philosophy stood on a sounder basis than did that of his fellows, inasmuch as he invariably knew when he was well off. And in being all the world to this little music teacher, whose heart's adoration looked out of her eyes, he had sufficient sense to know that he was very well off indeed.

"One wants a surety in this sort of thing," he explained sometimes to the man who, sharing his rooms, necessarily (Jocelyn being the man he was) shared his confidence. "If I were taken up for picking pockets to-morrow, it would not make the slightest difference to Celia. She is a woman in a thousand, my boy."

At all of which the room mate grunted, having a very poor opinion of Miss Brown, whom such a clay idol could satisfy, and none whatever of Jocelyn himself, though he was fond of him, too, in an odd kind of way, and put up with his companionship for other motives than because the plan worked economically and so was convenient.

"Why not, Celia?"

"I met Mr. Simmons at the corner, and he asked me to tell you he would drop in at nine for a pipe. It was exceedingly important, he said. He thought he had worked the difficulty with Dale, and that it would make all the difference if you could manage to settle about it soon. I don't know what he meant."

"I do," Jocelyn cried eagerly. "Of course the play must fall through. You [illegible] Celia, do you? It is about the paper. Simmons is to do the business part and I the editing. Dale is the man he hopes to make find the cash. Come along. I'll tell you all about it at dinner."

Celia's sympathy, so Jocelyn's friend rather maliciously complained, was like a lodging house fire in summer, ready laid for the match of her lover's enthusiasm, and she entered heart and soul into this new project which she now heard of for the first time. A clever woman, knowing that he was [illegible] would be ousting himself from work that actually paid to embark upon what might prove a perilious venture, and that Mr. Dale's concert was yet problematical. But Celia was not clever, and she was very much in love with her hero, as witness her prompt acceptance of his accounting for the bloodshot condition of his eyes by explaining that he had sat up writing the greater part of the night before. It did not occur to her to wonder why he had drawn her attention to them.

"You are not eating anything," she said, presently, as she plodded methodically through her own chop, and eyed his, which was barely tarted.

Jocelyn gave a short laugh.

"My appetite is a bit off, I think," he answered. "I don't know why. I'll have some tea and dry toast instead. Hi! waiter."

Celia paused while he gave the order, and sent away his plate as if the very sight of it sickened him, and then flushed hotly, for against her will a certain suspicion had entered her brain. And yet how disloyal to entertain it even for a moment! Had she not his promise?

"There is the Pictorial. Care to see it? Jocelyn asked, as he sat idly crumbling the toast which was presently brought to him.

He belonged to a class where the adage of no ceremony between friends is pushed to its farthest limits, and it did not enter his head to move to the opposite table to fetch the paper for her, although he would have done it at once if she had been a stranger.

Celia did not notice the omission; she was used to it.

"How hot my face feels," she thought, and as she turned her back on Jocelyn she glanced at the mirror on the opposite wall to see if it looked as red as it felt.

For the moment her eyes remained riveted. Then she turned back to her seat, and proceeded to bury herself in the pages of the Pictorial. Jocelyn, having talked himself out for the time being, did not resent her inattention.

On the way home: "If you don't mind," he said to her, pausing at his own door, "I won't take you all the way to-night; there is something I want to jot down before he comes, to show Simmons."

"I'm coming in," said Celia, unexpectedly. "He won't be here before nine; he told me so; and I have something to say to you."

Jocelyn sighed patiently as he followed her up the stairs. Probably another man guessing as well as he did that he was in for a talk which would be painful to both, and which would probably lead nowhere, would have swallowed an ugly word with the sigh, but Jocelyn was only sorry that she should insist on hurting herself. It was characteristic of the man that his chief regret in the matter lay not in the fact that he had broken his promise, but that he had ever made one which was irksome to keep.

"Well, pitch into me. Begin straight away," he said, as soon as they had passed from the dark staircase into the lighted room, the lodgers paying for the one, the landlord saving on the other. "I know what you mean by your tone, Celia. How did you know?"

He had a soft voice, and whenever he spoke to her it grew as tender as a caress. Celia had often wished it less so. She wished it to-night, for being of an uncompromising truthfulness herself, it seemed to her an extra deceit that he should sound so loving. In this she wronged him through lack of comprehension, since she molded her nature and he merely followed his. After all, our idols have not as a rule arrogated to themselves that position, and granting that it is we who have put them on their pedestal, at whose door lies the blame if they do not maintain their balance, but fall grovelling to the dust?

"I saw you," she answered him. "When I went to get the paper I saw you in the glass pouring out the brandy into your tea-cup. Yes, from that," as she touched his breast pocket. "I thought you had not been carrying it for weeks."

There was no reproach in her tone, but its utter hopelessness cut him to the quick. He drew nearer her, but meeting with no responsiveness turned sullen and proceeded to justify himself.

"Why shouldn't I?" he asked. "I have broken my word, I grant you, but I have my career to think about, and I can't afford to be anything but my best just now."

Celia sat down, feeling desperately tired all of sudden, as women will when embarked on an argument they have only conviction and instinct to support, and when these are but feeble weapons with which to combat the other side.

"It will ruin you in the future," she said, and stopped.

"Possibly," allowed Jocelyn.

He too had seated himself, resolved to go through with the thing since it was unavoidable, and to make her see his own view of the matter. He had never yet gone into it properly with her, rather enjoying the added importance it gave to find himself the object of so much solicitude.

"If you want to make a woman love you start some pet vices and induce her to think she can reform you," used to be one of his favorite axioms. But this, carried into practice, had stalled with custom, and he now found the admired solicitude bordered on what, in less lover-like moods, was perilously akin to a bore.

"But it isn't the future yet. Perhaps there will never be a future, and in any case it is problematical what its effect on my health will be, or even whether I shall still need a stimulus to work. But here's the present, and it is in the present I want to make my mark. Of course, when you're the wife of a [illegible] that is desirable enough, I grant you;

Jocelyn had forgotten the afternoon, and, indeed, it had been exceptional. "But I am as dull as ditch water unless I am wound up properly, and it is brandy that does it."

Celia looked up quickly.

"But to-day was the first time? You have been writing soberly for nearly three weeks?"

The expression angered him.

"Soberly?" he repeated. "Of course I write soberly. Why Celia—"

He waited a full minute, and then speaking her name again with a gentleness against which she would have been less than woman to be proof, he crossed the room and knelt down by her, circling with his arms the well built, erect little figure which so patiently longed to yield to his caresses.

"What harm does it do?" he asked, his tone in a whisper. "No one has ever seen me anything but sober. You never have, have you, dear? and you have seen no bad effects even, except that you say my eyes look misty. I am always locked in my room at my work. I distress no one. I hurt no one. The sole result is that I write well, sometimes even brilliantly, they tell me, instead of writing badly. Celia, what is the harm?"

"Jocelyn, do, oh! do give it up. Don't you see that the one thing which is keeping you back is that people don't know? And yet you chanced me finding it out to-night rather than forego it at a restaurant. If one now, then others soon; and then—there'll be nothing to stop you."

Her sentences were commonplace. Even while he listened to them, kneeling there with her bowed head resting on his shoulder, in the dual consciousness possessed by this man; and which proved in rather ghastly a fashion that he had not mistaken his vocation, he felt certain that he could have worded her appeal far better had he been framing it for some story. But beyond the spoken phrases there was the unevenness of the breath leaning softly against his neck; the slight collapse of the trembling form he was holding as she faltered over the last words, and he guessed dimly at the vista of misery they embraced. These were the things there was no getting into a mere novel.

"Marry me," he cried. "Don't let's go on being horribly prudent, and waiting for luck and coin. Marry me darling and make of me what you will."

There was a long silence. The man in the inner room, imprisoned against his will, but only catching a word here and there from their talk, noiselessly opened the door an inch or two to see if there was a propitious moment to intrude upon them on his way to the staircase. It was the friend who shared Jocelyn Warde's rooms, an undersized, ugly man named Jefferson. He had only seen Celia Brown hitherto for a few moments at a time, and there was nothing about the plain little woman to claim for him a second thought beyond a contemptuous wonder why men took their gold to women whom tinsel seemed equally to satisfy. But staring at her now through the cautiously opened door he was struck by the expression on her face, which, as he saw it, was sharply in profile. It was a hungering look, as if she were craving for something with an earnestness that knew her life's happiness to hang in the balance, and when Jocelyn broke the silence with an impassioned "You will say yes, my darling; let it be yes," and she answered with a sorrowful "It must be no," Something told Jefferson that there was real tragedy in the quietly uttered words.

He shut the door again and walking back to his previous post by the open window he stood looking out on the forest of chimney pots.

"Let it be 'Yes'" "It must be 'No'".

It is an odd thing that in inverse proportion to a man's contempt for woman's brain power should she ever chance to cross his own will, is his increased respect for her should she, through conviction and not caprice, thwart another man, and Jefferson viewed Celia differently from that moment. How miserable she looked, poor thing! Yet how unfalteringly she had spoken. It would be a waste of time to spend any in conjectures as to the meaning of this scrap of conversation he had overheard, for he knew by experience that the first time he met Jocelyn he would have the whole of it related to him.

His curiosity, such as it was (for the principal emotions of which this man seemed capable were exclusively called forth on the subject of certain stones for which he was at present digging in the British Museum) was destined speedily to be set at rest, for, realizing at length that at the risk of infinite pains to herself she was merely perjudicing her own cause, Celia went away, and Jefferson, venturing into his own domain, was received with a perfect torrent of words.

Jocelyn had forgotten all about his own arguments in favor of pursuing his ordinary courses, and raved against the decision that she would not marry him until he had learnt self-control, ending with the usual wide-of-the-mark and extravagant assertions that she was deryling him his salvation in this world, and, he doubted not, in the world to come.

"Bosh!" said Jefferson, unsympathetically. "You know you are drinking a deal deeper than you used, old fellow, and if she can't save you now with your marriage to hold out as an inducement, what earthly hold do you think she would have over you, if she had already given all she had to give?"

Tears sprang to Jocelyn's handsome eyes.

"I declare to you—" he was beginning, but his friend cut him short.

"Don't let's go on into the whole business again. I'm sick of it," he said, testily, and with that swung out of the room, coming back presently to light his pipe on the threshold.

"You get to work now, and try to do without any of your patent doctoring," he said significantly. "I wasn't to think it, but I do now. Miss Brown is worth it, you know."

CHAPTER II.

This new idea, that Miss Brown was worth it, gradually became a settled conviction with Jefferson. Having a violin pupil in that direction in the afternoons, she often came to the Bloomsbury rooms after five to pour out Jocelyn's tea and sit for an hour chatting with him, and the other man, who hitherto had been glad his work kept him from meeting her, now broke through the regular hours and came in for tea, too. They saw a good deal of each other in this way, for Jocelyn was often late, and Celia, woman-like, was glad to be able to talk of her idol rather than spend the waiting time in solitude. Feeling grateful that he consented to listen to her, she tried at last to make him talk upon other subjects which might amuse him, and touching by chance upon his one mania was amazed at the effect it produced upon him. She had found him impliant and indeed wooden in conversation as a rule, for which she compared him unfavorably to Jocelyn, forgetting that in this latter case she was satisfied to administer sympathy and never demand it. But upon the subject of hieroglyphics Jefferson roused into flesh and blood enthusiasm and Celia fell back contentedly into her old role of playing audience to a man's interests.

Naturally this cemented the one-sided friendship, and by the time that Jefferson had grown sure enough of his standing to propose that he should make the tea hour a little bit earlier, so that he could secure a little of her time to himself before Jocelyn should arrive to claim it, an idea matured in Celia's brain. This resolve once taken, she put it into immediate execution.

"He asked me to be here early, and now I find he has left a note saying he can't be back until seven," she said. "It is vexing."

It was evening when a theatre having been arranged, Celia had called for her later on the road to the restaurant. "I shall wait for him here, for it is no use dining by myself, I was going out?"

"No," he answered promptly, though his engagement book would have told another tale. "I dined in the middle of the day. I'll stay here if I'm not in the way."

"I want you to," said Celia eagerly. She looked strung up to-night and her face was flushed prettily. Jefferson felt a dull glow of satisfaction stealing over him, which was as pleasant as it was unwonted. He wasn't used to being wanted.

"What is it?" he asked, abruptly.

She came straight to the point. "It is about Jocelyn. You know, don't you, that he has not been feeling well enough lately to do his work without the tonic of wine or—of spirit, Mr. Jefferson?"

"Yes, I know." Jefferson's ugly face looked as stolidly unconsciousas was his tone.

Celia hesitated a moment, a delicate upright little figure outlined sharply against the waning daylight of the uncurtained window, and then she took the plunge.

"He makes a mistake, Mr. Jefferson; is it not good for him. And tonics are often dangerous when the doses are increased, as he does with his."

"You mean you are afraid he may, unwittingly, of course, take to drinking," her listener amended quietly. It seemed to him a false kindness not to show he understood. "Such things, of course, do happen, Miss Brown."

She turned and faced him suddenly with that quick indrawn breath heralding her words which was eloquent enough to those who knew her.

"Such things do happen," she cried, scornfully, "and yet you can waste your manhood over stones and tablets without putting out one finger to stem something of the sin and misery around you."

"Miss Brown!" He stood up, dumfounded at the attack.

"You call him your friend," she went on, "and you think this horrible thing may come, and you live with him, and yet you never do anything to prevent him."

Jefferson looked at her curiously, at the tightened clasp of her hands on the window ledge, at the color coming and going in her cheeks, and he wondered why her words should have the power to hurt him. He had done his best to prevent him, but he wasn't going to tell her that.

"What do you want me to do?" he said at last, when he had waited for her to go on and she had been silent. "I daresay I have been horribly selfish, but I will try to do what you tell me."

It was rather a woman's way to long for assistance when she is being made to feel her impotency, and then to shrink from this desire as soon as gained, for fear of some possible disloyalty to that other to whom her allegiance is due. Celia grew frightened and consequently began to generalize.

"There is nothing exactly to do," she said lamely, "and I don't mean so much, because Jocelyn has such foolish notions. I mean that I think it is a terrible thing, a despicable thing, to so narrow your interest that you care nothing for other people." Here she looked up and met his eyes. "I beg your pardon, I—"

"Don't. Why should you?" he said, at once. "I like plain speaking, and its true enough, for I care precious little for other people as a rule."

He hesitated as she had done, and looked up at her with an intentness for which she could not account.

"I'll do what I can for him, Miss Brown," he said slowly.

The talk seemed sudenly to have languished. Celia was still pondering over the strangeness of his gaze, and finally decided that when he answered her his thoughts had been far away. Jefferson was thinking after all it would have been as well if he had allowed that evening's engagement to stand. He wondered how she would look if he told her what these meetings had grown to mean to him. He supposed he was blunted, probably men were apt to get blunted when they had no women folk belonging to them, but for the life of him he could not see where the dishonor came in. It would not injure Jocelyn—he smiled grimly as he pictured that young man's calm disdain at the mere idea of rivalry being possible. It certainly would not injure Celia. While as to himself——. He took a sudden resolve.

"Miss Brown."

Celia's thoughts had been as far away as she had accused his of being. She came back to the present with a start.

"Yes."

"I made a mistake. I have an important engagement to keep to-night, and I am going off to keep it. But I want to speak to you first. I promised just now to help you, didn't I? I want to tell you why I did. It is because——"

Celia had just time to revert to her original ideas as to the woodenness and lack of emotion in his manner when, with a sudden gulp, he ended,

"I love you."

The startled inquiry in her eyes was more eloquent than many words. Afterwards Jefferson was glad to remember that there had been no indignation in them; she trusted him too perfectly for that.

"Don't tell me that I ought not to say this," he went on, with a grave gentleness that held her passive, "for if you were going to tell it word for word to Jocelyn to-night, I would say it just the same, and he would never resent it. But that night when Simmons came, and the paper was decided on, do you remember? He wanted you to marry him then and there, and you refused."

"Yes."

"I was shut up in the inner room, and I saw your face just at that moment. Jocelyn told me about it. It was the noblest thing I ever came across in my life—this breaking your own heart, and daring to madden and hurt him, just because you thought it right."

The dull monotonous voice ceased for an instant, and again the little dry gulp was heard in the silence.

"Perhaps it was not so very noble or out of the way after all. Perhaps women are always doing that kind of thing and it is only I who don't happen to have come across them. But it makes me understand better, and realize a good deal which I had not before. Then I came to know you."

The twilight had crept on apace, and he could see her white face but dimly.

"That is all." The pause had been long. "Of course, I shall keep out of your way after this, and probably I shall never see you again. But I'll stick like a leech to Jocelyn, and—oh, I shall be all right. You mustn't mind about me."

He added this last because a street lamp on the opposite pavement had been lighted and, seeking to dispel the shadows in the little room, it had betrayed the wetness of Celia's eyes.

"I only told you because you care so much about helping and setting right again, and—and so on. I thought it might please you one of these days to remember what you have done for me. Good night."

Celia put out the small hand, the touch of which always gave Jefferson such a sense of his own strength, and while it lay for the moment in his, she tried to say something to answer him.

"Don't try," he said, and loosed her hand gently.

It was the last piece of comprehension he gave her, for by the time she had dried the veiling tears, he had gone.

The marriage came off ten months later.

Jocelyn Warde's principles, or the lack of them, as regards the misusing of a means to an end, and Celia's struggles and entreaties, might alike fail, but it was a different matter when Jefferson took his friend in hand. He set himself with a dogged resolution to compass that one thing Celia desired, and on the night of the parting he vowed through his clinced teeth that nothing should balk him.

And nothing did. Jocelyn's querulous resentment of this high-handed interference, his many backslidings, the petty deceits to which he stooped, and the furious quarrels into which they were finally led, did not turn Jefferson one hair's breadth from his purpose. He knew his was the stronger nature, and that it was only a question of time. He clung to him as faithfully as his shadow and took all his curses and bad temper with stoical indifference, and in the end he not only conquered, but was thanked for his devotion by Jocelyn in a burst of that genuine emotion which men so rarely show to each other, and which usually cements a friendship for life.

Jefferson cared for it not one jot. He had carried through the one thing she had ever asked him to do, and when the wedding was definitely fixed, he suddenly left England.

"I do hope the poor chap is not off his head," Jocelyn told his bride in all seriousness, "for I feel sure that wretched secretaryship could have waited another week or two. I asked him if he didn't think it would be better manners to say good-bye to you, and he said he had. Did he, Celia?—Celia."

He spoke her name a second time, for though she was looking straight back into the eyes whose blue was never misty now, she had not answered him.

Then: "Oh, yes," she said, and she shivered a little. "Not quite immediately before he started, but I remember it well. Oh, yes, he said good-by."

ON THEIR WAY NORTH

Men Picked From the Best Troops in the Northwest—Their New Home.

The unusual sight of British redcoats attracted widespread attention on the streets last evening, and many people paused to admire a dozen or so bronzed fellows with jaunty forage caps and spurs who were looking over the town, says the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. They are members of a detachment of the Northwest Mounted Police, and are on their way to the far North. They have been ordered to the British boundary of Alaska, and will build quarters at the mouth of Forty-Mile creek on the Yukon, near Fort Cudahy. They will leave this city to-morrow or next day on Captain Healy's steamer Excelsior, and expect to reach St. Michael's in 16 days. From there they will enter on the long 1800-mile voyage up the Yukon, and will reach the post about August 1.

The detachment is under command of Captain Charles Constantine, an inspector of the Mounted Police with the rank of major. Captain Constantine says his men have been picked from the best troops in the Northwest Territory, and that he has now a command exceptionally sober and hardy. They have been selected from volunteers to go into the far north, and will remain on the Yukon at least two years.

Captain Constantine says his detachment will be the first to go to such high latitudes, with the exception of a trip made by himself and one of his staff sergeants named Browne a year ago. The two went overland, and Sergeant Browne was left, while his superior officer returned last fall and reported to his government. Fort Cudahy is 800 miles north of Battleford, the highest station in the Northwest Territory.

Captain Constantine was formerly in Winnipeg as chief of the provincial police. In 1885, during the Riel rebellion, he went to the front as a captain, and proved himself a very efficient and brave officer. On his return to Winnipeg the government gave him an inspectorship in the Mounted Police, with headquarters at Regina, the capital of the Northwest Territories. Since then he has risen until he has attained the rank of major. He is a determined-looking man of middle age, his hair slightly streaked with gray, and with iron-gray moustache and goatee, and military bearing, is a man that would attract attention anywhere.

In the command are Inspector D'Arcy Strickland, a graduate of the Royal Military College at Kingston, Ont.; Surgeon A. E. Wills, in medical charge of the company; Staff Sergeant Murray H Hayne, of Regina; Corporal G. E. Engle, of Moosina; Corporal E. Newbrook, of Battleford; Constables R. L. Jenkins, A. P. McKellar, F. Murray, all of Calgary; A. Pinkerton, E. Getford, M. V. Gowie, all of Regina; J. Brothers, E. W. Jenkins, both of Macleod; F. Webster, Wapella; J. Thornton, Fort Qu'Appelle; D. Sinclair, Maple Creek.

Captain Constantine and family and Inspector Strickland and Surgeon Wills are stopping at the Rainier-Grand, while the remainder of the detachment are at the Northern. Last evening under the direction of Manager Lynch, who has known them during his period of service in the territories, they visited the athletic club, and were shown about the city. They felt delighted with their treatment and the cordiality shown toward them, especially as they did not know how the uniform would be received.

Last evening as the men stood in front of the Northern one of them suddenly called out:

"Here come a couple of bluejackets. They are the first I have seen for a long time."

The redcoats all waited until the bluejackets had come up, and then each greeted the other with:

"Hello, boys."

That was enough introduction, and the fighting representatives of two of the greatest powers on earth soon were in animated conversation.

When the company arrives at Fort Cudahy, steps will at once be taken to build winter quarters. For this purpose timber will be brought a distance of 40 miles. Before the long winter sets in the men will be comfortably installed in their quarters.

DOMINION DAY RACES.

There will be a good programme of open races at Stanley Park July 1 and 2, including steeplechases, running and trotting races. The events will be Stanley stakes, mile and repeat, handicap, purse, $100; three minute class, 3 in 5, $125; two-year-old trotting and pacing, $25 each and $50 added; polo pony steeplechase, mile and half, handicap, gold plate, $50; three-quarter mile and repeat, handicap, $100; 2:40 class, trotting and pacing, $125; five-eighths of a mile dash, handicap, $100; grand steeplechase, gentlemen riders, two and quarter miles, prize, 20 guineas; free-for-all trotting and pacing, $200. The conditions in all classes will be given later.

BASEBALL.

SATURDAY'S GAME.

The game on Saturday between Nanaimo and Victoria bids fair to exceed in interest even the well contested matches between the local and Seattle team. Nanaimo's nine is reported to be in the pink of condition. Huxtable, who has done such splendid work behind the bat, was, unfortunately, injured in practice on Monday and it is doubtful whether he will be in condition to take part in the game. Franklin, however, will be available and as he has been practising with Lenfesty he may be relied upon to fill this important position acceptably. Jackson at shortstop and Scott at third base will improve the infield very much. The Amity team had no difficulty in solving Clarke's, Nanaimo's twirler, delivery last season, although Clarke is reported to be far more effective than last year, having pitched successfully in two games against Vancouver.

THE WHEEL.

TO OPEN THE TRACK.

The new track at Oak Bay is to be opened on the 29th instant with a grand meet to be given by the Victoria Wheelmen's club. The racing committee has been authorized to arrange the programme and proceed with the advertising. Dark blue stockings and knickerbockers, a sweater with club emblems and a cap to match, has been decided upon as the club uniform.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A meeting of the Capital lacrosse club is called for this evening. The James Bay club also meet after practice.

The annual tournament of the Northwest Sportsmen's association is to be held at Portland on June 20, 21 and 22.

In explanation of the Capital lacrosse club's experience at Vancouver on Monday it might be stated that most of the playing on the Vancouver side was done by Campbell, Miller and Morency, three of Vancouver's best senior players.

The full text of the demands of the powers will be published here to-day. It makes over three thousand words and the main points in it have already been cabled. The powers in this connection makes 12 distinct suggestions or demands in regard to Armenian reforms as follows: 1. The eventual reduction of the number of Vilayets. 2. Guarantees for the selection of Valis or governors. 3. Amnesty for American political prisoners. 4. Return of the Armenian exiles to their homes. 5. Final settlement for common law crimes. 6. The inspection of prisoners. 7. The appointment of a high commissioner to supervise the reforms. 8. The creation of a permanent committee of control at Constantinople. 9. Indemnity to the Hassoun and other victims of the recent massacres. 10. Regulation of religious conversions. 11. Maintenance of the Armenians' rights and privileges. 12. Positions of the Armenians in other Vilayets of Asiatic Turkey to be regulated on the same basis.

To-day there was a grand review of troops at Aldershot, held in honor of the visiting Afghan prince, in which 18,000 men took part. Nazrulla Khan, attired in a scarlet uniform and wearing a sword with a golden scabbard, was accompanied from London by the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Cambridge, the Marchioness of Lorne and Lord Roberts, and was received by the Duke of Connaught, who entertained the party at luncheon.

The crisis in the East is already regarded on all sides as being grave and this feeling is intensified by the news from Constantinople to-day telling of the panic at Djeddah and the threatened attack of the Bedouins, and the flight of Europeans who are seeking safety on board the vessels in the harbor. It is freely predicted here that an outbreak is inevitable. There is no question of the powers abating their demands in any form, although there is a growing belief that the Russians are backing Turkey in the latter's refusal to agree to the reforms demanded by the powers for Armenia.

AULD ROBIN GRAY.

The Author's Own Account of How the Ballad Was Written.

The ballad of "Auld Robin Gray," which has given immortality to the name of Lady Anne Barnard, was composed by her in 1771, when she was in her 21st year. . . . Not until two years before her death did Lady Barnard acknowledge it as her own. The occasion has become historical. In the "Pirate," which appeared in 1823, Scott compared the condition of Minna to that of Jeanie Gray, "the village heroine in Lady Anne Lindsay's beautiful ballad," and quoted the second verse of the continuation. This led Lady Anne to write to Sir Walter and confide its history to him. In her letter, dated July 8, 1823, she says: "'Robin Gray,' so called from its being the name of the old herd at Balcarres, was born soon after the close of 1771. My sister Margaret had married, and accompanied her husband to London. I was melancholy, and endeavored to amuse myself by attempting a few poetical trifles. There was an English-Scotch melody of which I was passionately fond. I longed to set the air to different words, and give its plaintiff tones some little history of virtuous distress in humble life, such as might suit it. While attempting to effect this in my closet, I called to my little sister Elizabeth), now Lady Hardwicke who was the only person near me. 'I have been writing a ballad, my dear; I am oppressing my heroine with many misfortunes. I have already sent her Jamie to sea and broken her father's arm, and made her mother fall sick, and given her auld Robin Gray for a lover; but I wish to load her with a fifth sorrow within the four lines, poor thing! Help me to one!' 'Steal the cow sister Anne,' said the little Elizabeth. 'The cow was immediately lifted by me, and the song completed."—A. B. Grosart.

A TALK WITH A NOVELIST

David Christie Murray Tells of a New Work of Which He is the Author.

He Gives His Opinion on That Much Read Novel Trilby by Du Maurier.

David Christie Murray, the well known novelist, author of "Aunt Rachel," "By the Gate of the Sea," and a large number of other volumes of fiction, is a guest at the Driard. Mr. Murray arrived in the city last night. He is touring the world and has as his travelling companion Frederic Stanley, an associate of the author in his literary productions. It was a deep, penetrating voice that said "come in" when a Times man knocked at the door of room 59 of the Driard. Seated on a chair, paint brush in hand, and a box of water colors lying on the table near him, was the popular novelist, David Christie Murray. His head was slightly bowed and he was putting a finishing touch to a sketch of a scene readily recognized by a British Columbia; it was a view of Burrard Inlet.

Mr. Murray laid down his brush, arose and extended his hand. "I am pleased to meet you," he said. "This is Mr. Frederic Stanley, my friend," continued the novelist, pointing to a gentleman of tall figure, but with a slight stoop, and who had arisen from a reclining position in a cozy armchair, where he had been enjoying a smoke.

"Take a seat"—Mr. Murray motioned to a chair and Mr. Stanley passed around a package of cigarettes. Mr. Murray lighted his cigarette, sat down and said that he was delighted with the climate of British Columbia; it was so invigorating after the heat of the east. "We are travelling for our pleasure and to collect information that may be of use to me in prospective and future works. We have allowed ourselves three years for our trip and intend to visit all countries where are to be found Anglo-Saxon people and their descendants. I deliver lectures where I can get an appreciative audience, and I am making sketches for a book of travels that I shall publish on Canada and the United States. Here is a little sketch"—and he rose from his chair and showed the newspaper man the sketch of Burrard Inlet. "It is one of the prettiest pieces of scenery I have seen," he said as he brushed his long silvery gray hair from a prominent forehead. "You can see it better with this. It will give you an idea of how it will be when it is in book form as a picture. This glass minimizes the scene." Mr. Murray again sat down.

"Tell me something about your works. Which is your pet? The public always like to know what the author thinks of his own works."

Mr. Murray smiled: "My favorite has always been 'Aunt Rachel,' but I also have a second fancy, and that is 'Joseph's Coat.' But the public and I may not be of the same opinion. What will be of more interest to you, perhaps, is the fact that to-morrow from the presses of Harper Brothers at New York will appear another work by me. The title is 'The Martyred Fool,' it is a story of the drifting of a sensible man into socialism and anarchism. My hero is of Welsh extraction, by name Evans Hyrs, who is born in Australia and who has imbibed many of the new ideas now being promulgated. He is a fool, as the title states, but he is a martyred fool, a man who from conscientious convictions believes what he does. It is a story the characters of which I have studied deeply, and as the subject, socialism, is a live political issue, I expect that there will be many criticisms. You can never tell, however. What an author thinks good the public do not take to. They look through different spectacles."

"That was the case with Trilby," said the newspaper man.

"Yes," said Mr. Murray. "Trilby is an odd book. It is what an Australian would call catchy. There is no very great merit in the story, and yet the public have gone mad over it. I think 'Peter Ibbetson' a novel of much greater merit, and yet it did not 'take' like 'Trilby.' And as for 'Vanity Fair' of Thackeray and 'David Copperfield' of Dickens, I do not think there is a comparison. But I never heard of them making such a furore. The theme is a novel one in 'Trilby' and Du Maurier has made the best of it."

"How long do you intend staying here?"

"Only a short while. I want to take a view of the environments of the city. I have a novel, but it is not on paper yet, and this portion of the continent may likely be the scene of action."

Mr. Marray is a tall, broad-shouldered man and dressed in a Prince Albert coat. He wears a four-in-hand tie and prefers the wide style of cuff. He is clean-shaved, and his hair is long and gray. He is less than 50 years old, having been born in 1847, but one would take him to be nearer 60, although his carriage is very erect and his step firm. Mr. Murray is a newspaper man by training, having begun life as a reporter of the Birmingham dailies. He acted as special war correspondent of the Times and the Scotsman in the Russo-Turkish war. He began novel writing in 1879, when "A Life's Atonement" first appeared in Chambers' Journal. His first contribution was well received by the fiction-reading public and he has ever since been a friend with the lovers of the novel.
